

FCC rules should not be modified to allow cellular/wireless phone usage aboard airborne aircraft. I am concerned that the proposed modification could have a negative impact on the "air rage" syndrome where airline passengers become outraged. Unfortunately, while on an aircraft, airline passengers do not have the option to walk away from an annoying person in cellular conversation and would become more easily outraged by such a nearby individual.